Inequality & Race The First Annual Policy Debate

The first annual policy debate was held on Wednesday, February 22nd, featuring riveting Inequality & Race. The goal of the conversation was to distinguish writers to campus to debate major community concern. It featured Reeves, a senior fellow of economic studies at the Brookings Institute and Jason Riley, a senior fellow at the Manhattan Institute. The discussion covered topics such as inequality, measurement of inequality, gender pay gap, culture poverty, and the war on drugs. The lecture drew a great turnout of both faculty members and students.

First Annual Faculty Dinner and Reception Featuring Professor Matthew Hockenos

The Honors Program is proud to have the opportunity to facilitate dialogue with Professor Matthew Hockenos, the Todd and Susan Hockenos Professor of History, and discuss his research and writing. How he first became interested in history and how he became a professor. Hockenos has experienced the Nazi and Holocaust, and discussed the lives and death of two German Protestant laymen, Dietrich Bonhoeffer and Martin Niemöller. Niemöller was an early and vocal critic of Adolf Hitler and a defender of the autonomy of the Protestant Church. His opposition to Hitler eventually led to his imprisonment in a concentration camp. He is perhaps most well known for his statement during the early post-war period. "First they came for the socialists, and I did not speak out—because I was not a Socialist. Then they came for the Trade Unionists, and I did not speak out—because I was not a Trade Unionist. Then they came for me, and no one left to speak for me." Hockenos, the son of a prominent professor of philosophy and his more recent trips to Germany as a child and even lived his somewhat indirect path to graduate school in history. He also writes about his love for reading and making new discoveries. Professor Hockenos's first book, The Moral and Political Eye, is available for purchase.
